SELECT CASES

- Finnigan et al v Lee – Counsel to the successful defendant physician in a trial in which the patient alleged delay in the diagnosis of lymphoma and insufficient pain management. The trial judge reinforced that a “worst first” principle (that physicians must take action based on the worst possible potential outcome) is not the law in Ontario and a stepwise approach to diagnosis is appropriate.
- Cheesman v Credit Valley Hospital – Counsel to a defendant ophthalmologist in 15-week jury trial alleging negligence in treatment of an infection resulting in sepsis and multiple complications.
- Warwaruk v Jones-Carter – Counsel to the successful defendant physician in a medical malpractice trial involving allegations that the physician was negligent in his management of shoulder dystocia during delivery. Decision includes important consideration of the causation principles applicable to medical malpractice actions generally.
