

October 15, 2019

Toronto law firm swaps stale, stuffy aesthetic for happier staff

Our firm was mentioned in the Globe and Mail's recent article for our renovated space.

...

"It had very strong colours and lots of wood, and it was right for the time," she says. "But the firm has changed in 27 years and we've gone from being a small boutique firm to an enterprise that has over 70 lawyers and more than 100 support staff."

...

"We found a lot of the younger lawyers were booking boardrooms to get together, so they didn't feel so isolated in their offices," Ms. Roy says. She also saw the need to brighten the reception area for clients. "We were going for a calming feel, because people come to us on some of their worst days. We guide corporations that are going under, CEOs who are facing a class-action suit and people facing removal from their professions. We wanted the space to feel welcoming and professional at the same time."

Continue reading:

<https://www.theglobeandmail.com/business/industry-news/property-report/article-toronto-law-firm-swaps-stale-stuffy-aesthetic-for-happier-staff/>